HELPING BUSINESSES MEASURE IT EFFECTIVENESS

Traditionally, IT has suffered from a certain “disconnect.”

While Managers are expected to have a handle on finance, marketing, HR and most other “business” concerns, IT has largely been left to the CIO and their team of specialists.

As a result, IT departments have tended to become isolated from other areas of the business. The IT team works busily on server maintenance, software upgrades and cloud migrations without getting much feedback on how their work is impacting customers and staff.

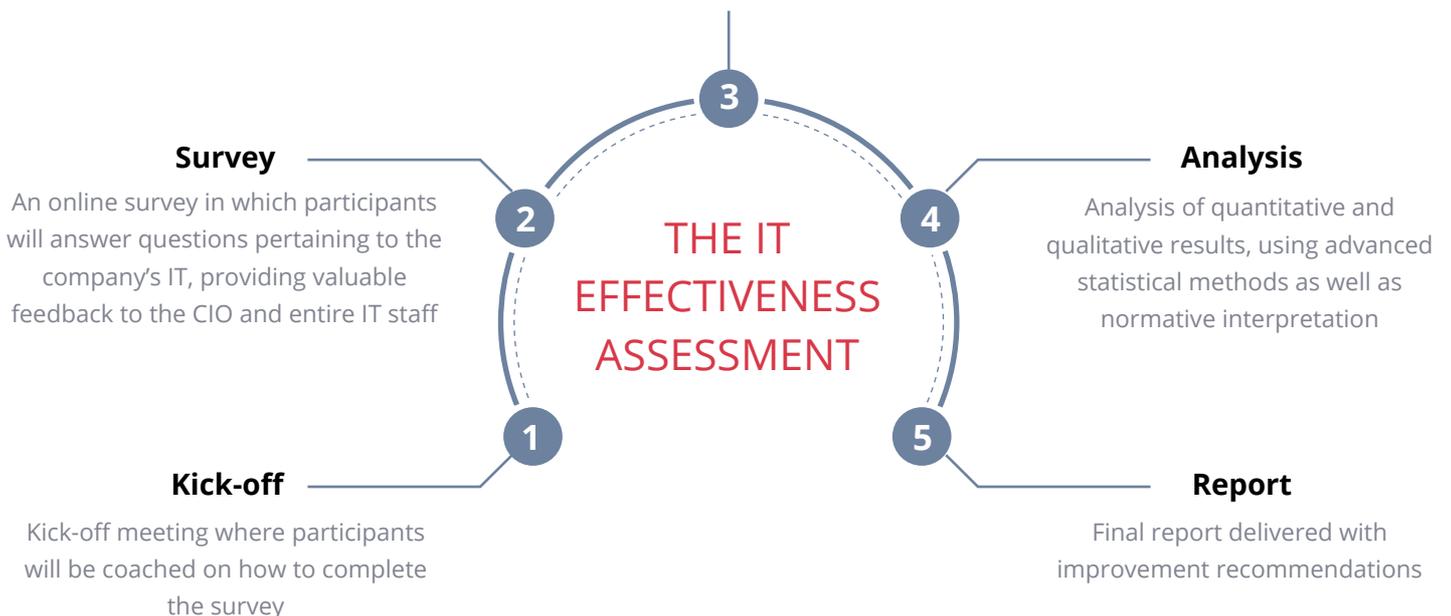

The unfortunate consequence of this is IT systems that are ‘technically’ strong but, when viewed from a business perspective, are ultimately ineffective.

By conducting an assessment you will have:

- A clear picture of where your IT is, where it is headed, and where it should be
- A solid framework for intelligent decision making that increases IT effectiveness
- Concrete recommendations that you can put into practice immediately.
